

A multi-mesh approach for adaptive treatment of control problems

Axel Voigt, TU Dresden

We consider an adaptive finite element approach which allows to independently refine and coarsen meshes for each component in a system of partial differential equations. We will explain the approach and show first results if the approach is applied to control problems with independently refined meshes for the primal and dual variable.